

Radiating Pain & Numbness

Radiating Pain and Numbness is a very common complaint for Canadians and it is also an issue for which there are many causes. The key factor in eliminating this symptom is finding the root cause of the suffering and bringing it to an end, to allow the body to correct itself.

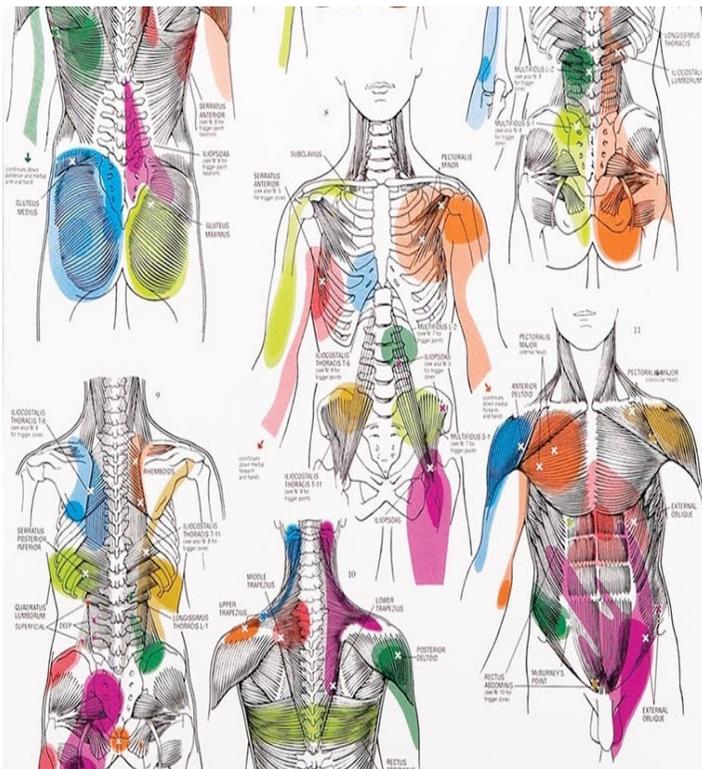

The First Step : Diagnosis:

Utilizing the various tools at our disposal, we will determine what type of injury we are dealing with. The tools used include X-rays, Thermal and EMG, EI scan, health history, posture analysis and more. Once it is determined what the root cause of the pain is, we can treat the root and help eliminate the symptoms.

The Second Step: Determining the Root Cause: Likely Sources

Trigger Point Pain

Trigger points are locations in the skeletal muscle (movement muscles) and fascia, the membrane overlaying the muscle. Trigger points are hyper sensitive and hyper irritable and can cause specific patterns of pain. This type of pain is corrected with myofascial release massage which breaks up scar tissue in the fascia and releases the often associated tightness which is causing the pain.

Nerve Entrapment

- Occurs when pressure is applied to a nerve via subluxation or scar tissue.
- Use adjustments and manipulation and mobilization to remove nerve pressure and correct the issue.
- In cases located in the feet, such as Morton's Neuroma, orthotics can help prevent the metatarsals from shifting back into their previous position and causing re-injury.

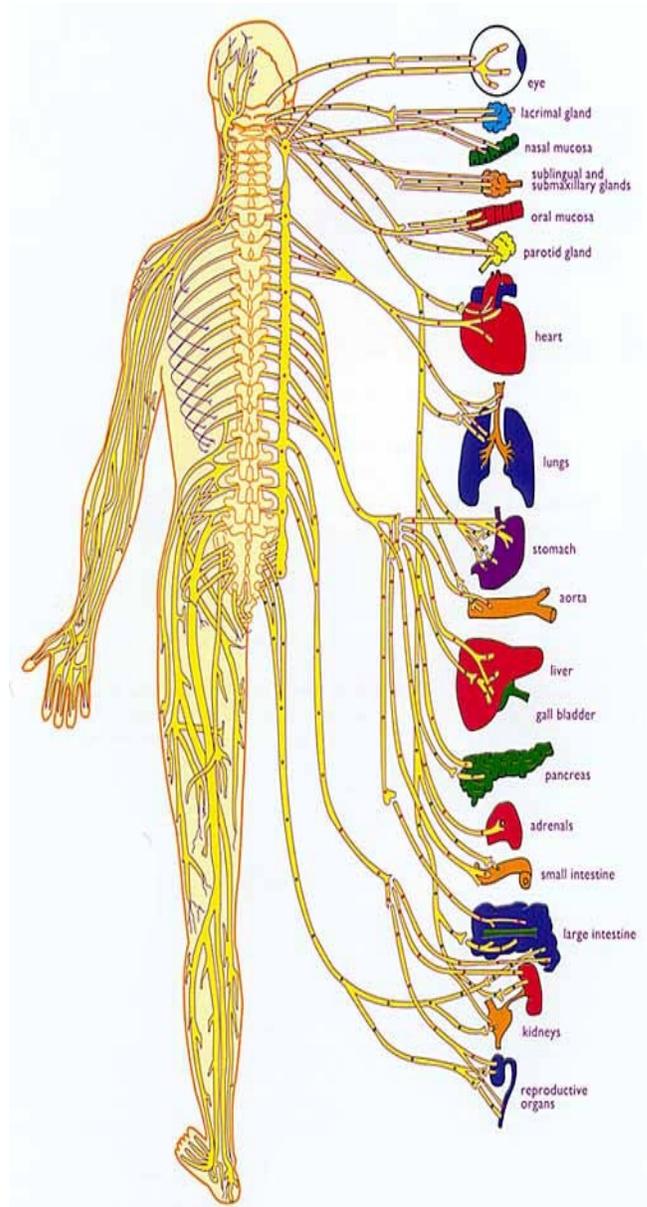

Organ referred Pain

When particular organs are in distress, diseased or inflamed, they may refer pain to the outer extremities, along nerve lines called dermatomes. For example the gall bladder will cause right shoulder pain. An EI scan will show if any of the organs which commonly refer are in crisis and the correct nutritional and supplemental steps can be taken to correct the problem.

Result

The final diagnosis can be any one issue or a combination of them all. By utilizing our comprehensive diagnostic tools we will find the root of your problem and lift you back up to pain free health.

For patients suffering from complex issues, we suggest taking advantage of our Complete Health Analysis (CHA) promotion, with which you can visit each practitioner for an initial consultation, for 1/2 price! No other clinic offers this opportunity to be assessed as a whole being, rather than as a collective of parts.
